

Collapse of Reality?

(March 7, 2024)

I'm sure you've noticed that with every app you download to your smart phone, there is an option to turn on "Notifications." Imagine if you have 20+ apps each with notifications all turned on. You'd be spending a good portion of every day simply scrolling through notifications to see what's happening.

The only notifications I have "on" are my text messages. I like to know when family and friends contact me so I can respond to them in a timely manner. However, I'm not at all interested in turning on notifications for any other app, including my email. It seems a carefully drafted and onerous way of drawing us into the digital world inside our phones and keeping us there so that we learn to forget the real world we are actually living in. It quickly morphs into a habit, then an addiction that people don't even realize they're caught up in.

My wife recently took a flight to a business meeting. Next to her sat a young woman who had her head phones on, her phone in hand and her fingers scrolling and clicking through everything. She was signalling, "Don't bother me. I'm in my digital world and that's much more important than face-to-face talking with another human being." That was the message so for the entire flight and she had actively chosen anti-reality versus true reality. It's what the elite want. They only want us relating to one another in the digital world where they can control what happens and easily be able to surveil everyone. If we aren't using or carrying our phones, they don't know what we are doing. They've made the digital world so inviting and what it will become remains to be seen, but we can bet it's going to become even more consuming for people.

This is the huge problem with technocracy (based on technology). Technocracy, we previously stated, is technology that ends up enslaving people, though it was originally intended to liberate (my paraphrase). Once technology begins to wrap its fingers around people's throats, most will never realize what is happening to them until it's way too late. I don't want to be caught off guard like that, do you? Too many aren't even aware of their surroundings anymore because of their relationship with their phones. We must do things to avoid that situation or we will increasingly get sucked into it.

Turn your notifications "off" except for one or two most important apps in your phone. Even there, if it gets too much and you find yourself always looking at your phone, turn off all notifications and determine which hours in the day you'll give your phone some attention. This way, you are in charge, not your phone. The digital worlds the elite are busy creating are essentially digital prisons in that growing digital world.

It is because of this, that the coming collapse of reality will further destroy any remaining civility in global society. We know social media have already done that to a large degree. The coming collapse will be replaced with a fake reality that few realize is fake. They'll hum along as usual and not notice anything else. The people who are awake will see and understand. In fact, the Bible tells us that the wise will understand.

Many shall purify themselves and make themselves white and be refined, but the wicked shall act wickedly. And none of the wicked shall understand, but those who are wise shall understand. Daniel 12:10

That verse is talking about the latter days, the days I believe we are in now. The idea of purifying yourself and even making yourself "white and refined" can have a number of meanings. The obvious one is that those who are martyred for their faith will become "white and refined." That's certainly true enough, but those who give themselves to Him may find that the end of their life on earth comes through martyrdom. They will not balk at that, but will lean heavily on our LORD for strength.

It could also mean that Christians will purify themselves in their thinking, their speech and their overall lives because of their growing love for Jesus and what He has accomplished for us. This "purification" is not ritualistic or ceremonial. It is a real and truthful putting off of those things that keep us from receiving a greater anointing from our LORD allowing us to live the way He wants us to live, in ways that glorify Him. We will spend eternity future living that way, but we need to start now, to a finite degree.

Notice the last sentence of the above text from Daniel 12:10: The wise shall understand. As we appropriate more of God's Presence through faith, He grants us wisdom. He sees our heart, understands that we seek to live in a way that pleases Him (regardless of the cost), and rewards us with increased wisdom. That wisdom will be used by us to walk the straight and narrow path like never before. We will see the clear path and understand what the enemy is doing because we are sold out to God in Christ. The writer of Hebrews spells it out quite clearly.

And without faith it is impossible to please him, for whoever would draw near to God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who seek him. Hebrews 11:6

Our journey starts with faith in Christ. It also ends with faith and faith is the quality that carries us through this life, leaning more and more on Christ. It is faith that pushes us to God in the first place and it is faith that continues to push us back to Him daily. The reward so to speak for exercising faith is God's ability to provide for us what we need at any given time. Most of the time, we will need wisdom to know how to pray, wisdom to see the works of the enemy and wisdom to stand against the enemy, not allowing them to overcome us.

You'd agree with me that God is good. Problem is we will not begin to fully understand that until we are in His Presence after we die. However, we can gain strong personal glimpses of His goodness now and those glimpses are designed to increase our faith in Him. That allows us to move with passion toward Him more each day. It is in and through this process that God grants us the thing we need most, (as part of the process of salvation): Wisdom. Without wisdom we cannot make a simple good decision. We cannot know the way to go. We cannot please Him. He wants us to have all that we need for life and godliness and the first order of business after we receive salvation is gaining more and more wisdom.

But wisdom in and of itself is not a guarantee and we have King Solomon as a perfect example. He made many mistakes and failed to follow the dictates of wisdom. He gave into his feelings too often. In this particular day and age, we cannot succumb to that. God will help us get through it if we are faithful in seeking Him daily.

Technocracy and Technocrats are doing their level best to bring their envisioned world to fruition throughout the entire planet. It is now being pushed along heavily by the increasing ability of artificial intelligence (AI). As we move toward Satan's vision for this world, we know he has tapped people like Klaus Schwab and his acolytes to do the grunt work in this physical realm, rewarding them greatly for their efforts. They're creating "stakeholder capitalism," which is the old Lords vs Serfs situation of the Middle Ages where the Lords controlled/owned everything.

Technocrats like Klaus Schwab are pushing for that throughout the entire globe. They want global society to be overseen by "Lords" (themselves), who then own everything but allow the serfs to have crumbs and tidbits. The serfs rarely owned their own homes under that system or the land. They simply worked the land and could easily be replaced if they did not satisfy that Lord's demands.

If you wonder what that looks like, simply take a look at the TV series, Downton Abbey. There, everything is perfectly laid out for viewers so that there is no misunderstanding. The Lords owned it all. This at times, created tension and problems between the Lords and the serfs and it took a great deal of time to overthrow and replace. However, you can bet people like Klaus Schwab and the Rockefellers and all the rest live in their Lords vs Serfs situation. I don't know if Schwab is officially a "lord" but I'm sure he is treated as such by all of his servants, who are probably very grateful to have jobs.

This is the vision the elite have for the entire world. They don't believe that we should actually benefit from any hard work we put in at our jobs. We should not be able to start businesses that might actually make it and thrive. We shouldn't own homes, cars or anything. That's for them, not us. You must understand that these people have literally nothing else to do. They have everything they need for 10 lifetimes. Money is no object. They can purchase any fantasy they consider. What's left after that? Controlling the entire world if nothing else, but to see if they can. If they were not trying to control the entire world, they would be miserably bored and dissatisfied with life itself. Controlling the world is the "job" they have given to each other. It is their focal point and everything revolves around bringing that full control to this planet. They are egoists to the extreme and quite proud of their continued efforts to enslave all of humanity in their bid to become the world's overlords.

In a recent Technocracy round table discussion featuring John Haller[1], Patrick Wood[2] and Pablo Frascini[3], the three men discussed various aspects of exactly what is meant by the word "Technocracy" and how it is likely to affect all of us. Patrick Wood has been researching and writing about Technocracy for decades and is probably one of the foremost experts to find out what is meant by it and how plans are unfolding to bring it to fruition throughout the globe. You can watch the entire two hour video at link number four below[4].

By the way, as a bit of an aside, as I listened, I was wondering why Patrick Wood had such halting speech. During the round table discussion, he referred to the stroke he'd had a while ago, so obviously he was still experiencing difficulty forming sentences. We should all join in prayer for God's complete healing for him. That said, he does a good job explaining what Technocracy is all about and where he believes it's going.

One of the things Wood says during the second hour is what he calls the collapse of reality. This will happen, he believes due to the increase of realism with AI and I've highlighted some of that above. Pablo discussed several current examples of videos that were completely created by AI. He noted that for the casual observer, they might not be able to discern that everything in the video (including the people), were all created by AI. Those involved in AI production would certainly be able to see it.

But, with the way AI is progressing, along with the computing power that underpins it, it won't be that long before no one can really tell what is real and what is fake. This will lead to a situation where absolute reality will collapse simply because everything will appear super-realistic. Eventually, we see the False Prophet using some form of AI mixed with supernatural works to animate the statue of the Antichrist that and was "wounded yet lived" (Revelation 13:11-15). By that time, clearly AI will be something else entirely and mixed with supernatural miracles will cause everyone to worship the first beast.

Avoid the coming collapse of reality to anti-reality. Start exercising your faith now and expect God to reward that faith with increasing wisdom. You will need it as the days grow increasingly evil.
